Urban areas present the most complex environment for military operations. This complexity is derived from numerous factors such as location, history, economic development, climate, available building materials, the natural terrain on which they are built, the cultures of their inhabitants, and many other factors. There are many ways to frame an understanding of the factors influencing the urban environment, one of which is to view the urban environment as an urban triad consisting of complex man-made physical terrain, a population of significant size and density, and an infrastructure. A complex man-made physical terrain consisting of manmade structures of varying types, sizes, materials, and construction. A population of significant size and density inhabits, works in, and uses the man-made and natural terrain. An infrastructure upon which the area depends also occupies man-made terrain and provides human services and cultural and political structure for the urban area and of ten beyond, perhaps for the entire nation. Operations in urban areas may occur within the context of a campaign or major operation. These operations may take place entirely within a city or may include multiple urban areas and may be influenced by interconnected surrounding areas. The joint force commander (JFC) will determine whether or not operating in an urban environment is essential for the conduct of the campaign or major operation and, if so, where and when to conduct joint urban operations (JUOs). The urban environment is made up of adaptive system with a wide range of structures, processes, and functions that have evolved to sustain concentrated human societies in confined space. These structures are all the various familial, tribal, professional, commercial, governmental, social, religious, educational, and media institutions that typify urban...
